Being Becoming

In philosophy, becoming is the possibility of change in a thing that has being, that exists. In the philosophical study of ontology, the concept of becoming originated in ancient Greece with the philosopher Heraclitus of Ephesus, who in the sixth century BC, said that nothing in this world is constant except change and becoming. This point was made by Heraclitus with the famous quote "No man ever steps in the same river twice." His theory stands in direct contrast to the philosophic idea of bein

Sentences like "This event became present" record facts of absolute becoming. The terminology may be pretentious, but the idea is simple. Absolute becoming is just the happening of events. The raison d'être, the very being or existence of events, is in their happening (at some place and time). If one is willing to embrace this category of entity at all, then one has the tools for a minimalist understanding of passage.
